Annette.

BY EDWARD RENAUD.

Annette, 'twas strange to meet last night; Long years ago, when last we met, Your bright eyes were no longer bright, And the long dashes trembled, wet With tears, Annette!

And now, a bow, a smile, a jest, Who would have deemed us friends be fore. Or read the riddles in each breast? Strange memories of dead days of yore, Youth's golden store!

So, wandering by life's solemn sea, Some wave fl.ugs back a well known face. With eyes that hau it us mourefully, So tender, with the last tear trace, From death's embrace!

Can I blame you, can you blame me, For change that comes? Who, changing, grieves? Ah, no! the flower forgets the dew, And autuma gilds her golden sheaves With last year's leaves!

The broad, bright masses of vour hair, That flamed in glistening waves of gold, Say, have new lovers found them fair As when in those dear days of old Live's tale was told?

Each hour some blessed boon to win, While days seemed moments, drunk with bliss.

We found life sweet, aye, sweet as sin! The days were burren did we miss To clasp and kiss! Who calls dead love back from its grave?

Not you nor I; its tomb is set Hard by the murmur of life's wave And we are wiser, who forget, Nor fume, nor fret! Could you or I, dear, wander back

To faith's forgotten inneral pyres, And find once more tove's golden track, Or light, from life's long blackened fires-Lave's dear desires? That rose within your shining hair

Was symbol of your thought and mine; Although, as when I quaffed it there, Your fips blushed, brimming and divine, With love's red wine. So, looming up like phantom ships,

In strange, wile moments such as these, One moment, while each one go dips, We meet, and great, then hug the breeze For unknown seas!

Would you or I call back the past, Since love's last star long since nes set? Farawell, the scout sail bends the mast! Farewell! which means we must lorget-Ametic! Assetts!
